

It is with pleasure that we invite you to submit your nomination for participants for the: Financial Mail: Little black book 2016

When The Little Black Book was first published by the Financial Mail in 2001 it sought to introduce a new generation of black professionals to the wider market and to dispel the notion that there was a shortage of qualified leaders, decision-makers and professionals within South Africa's newly empowered black community following the democratic transition.

Then there was little representation of black professionals in the top echelons of business especially at C-suite level. Over the past two decades of democracy SA has given birth to a new breed of black corporate leaders. Many of the old black corporate leaders that made it to the book more than a decade ago have now retired and made way for a new pool of black talent expected to lead for the next years to come.

The nominees should at minimum come from the private sector and currently hold the title Executive Director, or be an operational shareholder in either a listed or an unlisted company.

All nominees must be natural citizens of South Africa from within the "designated groups" (Black, Indian, Coloured).

Please submit your nomination form via e-mail to payneh@fm.co.za before April 30.
